

Dwarf Burning Bush

Euonymus alatus is a dark-leaved shrub, inconspicuous for most of the year but in autumn it comes into its own when the foliage turns bright shades of scarlet and crimson.

The summer flowers are insignificant, but they result in attractive purple and red fruits which split open to form four-winged lobes with a bright orange seed at the centre.

The bark is also attractively winged. It's perfect for growing as a specimen shrub in a mixed border or front garden, where its magnificent autumn colours can be fully enjoyed.
